Vineyard Haven, Mass. December 18—Rev. D. J. Miller Cannot Be Found by Vineyard Haven, Mass. December 18—Rev. D. J. Miller, pastor of the Bethel M. E. D. J. or near Great Round Shoal, Nantucket Sound.

Capiain Carter's vessel was towed by the Acusinet from Great Point, Nantucket, where he had anchored Thursday night, after being battered in the storm. He reports that Friday morning the lookout of the Hart saw at two-masted schooner, deeply laden, which he believes was the Hall, break away from her anchorage a mile north of them and sweep past them, headed for Great Round Shoals. Her way lay over jutting sand shoals and rips and the Nantucket South Shoals. Even should she have succeeded in clearing these, Capiain Carter thinks her chances in the heavy seas raging outside were slim.

Carucgle Foundation Investigates

Methods of Universities.

ISpecial to The Times-Dispatch.1

New York, December 18.—To discover whether the best use is made of the large staffs of American universities and whether their costly buildings and plants are turned to the greatest advantage, the Carnegle Foundation has recently sent Morris Lieuwlyn Cooke. ber of them and report on their organization from the business man's point of view. He made a detailed study of the methods in force in the departments of physics in the Univerities of Harvard, Columbia, Wisconsin and Princeton, in Haverford and Williams Colleges and in the Massachusetts institute of Technology. His results are published in a bulletin of the Carnegle Foundation. He has in the course of it been content to allow facts to speak for themselves, rather than make direct criticisms, but he runs foul of one or two cherished university institutions, such as the life tenure of professors, the committee system of management and the importance put on research work.

Indeed, he asks by what authority such large sums are expended in the latter by presumably teaching institutions, and tells of one piece of research work which had been in progress for two years, which all but the professor wo years, which all but the professin charge pronounced absolutely us

He points out the expense of many professors who are engaged in research and of others who occupy positions that mean very little to the education of the ordinary scholar. While research is not criticized to any serious degree, Mr. Cooke is of the opinion that some universities might spend more money for the practical training of its students and less in trying to find something new, while its students perhaps have not been thoroughly trained in courses that stand as an urgent part of common day education.

Laredo. Texas, December 18.—With the exception of the Guerrero District, all of Mexico is tranquil to-day, according to an official dispatch from Enrique C. Creel, Mexican minister of foreign relations. In a telegram to Miguel E. Diebold, consul for Mexico at Laredo, Minister Creel describes the routing of the revolutionary forces mear Padernales several days ago, and continues:

"With this new defeat it is probable that the balance of the revolutionary forces will form into scattered groups, which will be tenaciously pursued by the federal forces until subdued. Peace prevails unaltered in every other parts of the republic."

In commenting, Consul Diebold said:

"The government is energetically pushing its campaign against the enemy, and is fully able to cope with the situation."

"In my optinion the alleged revolutionary movement is now effectively stamped out. Of course, there may be a minor guerrilla warfare carried on for a short time, but the ultimate supermacy of the government forces is undoubted."
